Speed, responsiveness and fluidity of gameplay have all been improved by using the data captured from the new motion capture suits. Players may also now more accurately replicate their real-world movements in-game. New camera options for editors and tools for both sports and leagues have been added to the new AI engine, delivering improved creativity and player skill. For player skills, players more precisely reflect the actions of their real-world counterparts and players are able to more accurately perform “drop shots,” fast reflexes and shooting. Matchday updates provide real-time changes on players during matches, including their fatigue, injuries and substitution decisions. Players will no longer always play the same passes or make the same substitutions to avoid their fatigue worsening. As players’ fatigue levels rise and drop, the dynamic of the game naturally changes. Additional gameplay modes include “FIFA 22 Ultimate Team,” which helps players create their own Ultimate Teams with the power to build and manage a starting XI of up to 55 players, with thousands of kits, shorts and personalized faces and uniforms. Players can now also customize their own FIFA Ultimate Team and use FIFA Management tools to build, trade and manage their team with over 1,400 collectibles. Players can also improve their team with the introduction of new player classes such as “Lightning Players,” which can make the most of the game’s brand new passing system. There are also new Player Abilities - the ability for players to control the direction of a high speed pass, which now impacts passing accuracy, and “Mobility,” which allows players to retain the ability to attack, as they are now more agile. Player movement and movement speed have been significantly improved. The game’s Tutorial features have been improved, as well as an additional Camp mode, which allows players to improve their FIFA 22 skills in a fun and enjoyable way. Players can select from a wide range of solo drills, or play against the CPU or against a friend, “Camp Boss” mode. As previously announced, “FIFA 22” features FIFA Ultimate Team™, the official online mode from EA SPORTS FIFA. Players can create their Ultimate Team with the ability to build and manage squads of up to 55 players, and use FIFA Management tools to build, trade and manage their team with thousands of collectibles. Players can improve their team with new Player Classes, such as the Lightning Players, which can

FIFA is one of the best-loved video game series on the planet, but today it's more than a game. It's the number one sports and lifestyle brand in the world and it's on a mission to bring people closer to the game. In the UK, EA launched a new campaign in the weeks before the start of the 2018/19 season, turning the idea of FIFA into a conversation with fans about the real game and what we can all do to improve it together. A global campaign for #TheGameChangers can be seen across UK billboards and in-store adverts, while digital ads and microsites drive the conversation online. The series' first-ever branded film starring Tom Hanks shows just how much the brand has changed. There are major advances in every area. We've made sure the game delivers the most believable ball, every player is more explosive than ever and the pitch is as consistent and responsive as real grass. We have a whole season's worth of game-changing ideas we can call on, from boots that automatically adapt to shoe size to the use of the brand new Player Impact Engine. Every release delivers a truckload of new features and capabilities which make a real difference to the way players look, feel and play. It all adds up to what EA likes to call 'next generation gameplay'. So how did we get there? Game-changing ideas from PUE All this is powered by the brand new Player Impact Engine, or PUE for short. This completely rewrites the rules of football to make the most natural, reactive and responsive game in the series. It's the most significant and extensive set of game-changing ideas we have ever put in a release. It's a collection of features which are more like upgrades than new ideas, but which have been designed to make the game even better for players. They're the foundations for our vision for gameplay in FIFA. Players will be able to adapt to any surface, from turf to carpet to snow, as well as improved looks and animation, dynamic crowd interactions and real sounds to make the game even more immersive. Our PUE also completely transforms the artificial intelligence of players, referees and goalkeepers. They make it much easier to see off-sides, work together as a unit and can even talk to each other. New bc9d6d6daa

It was released on PlayStation 3 and Xbox 360 on June 22, 2013, and on Microsoft Windows on June 23, 2013. It was the successor to the 2011 game FIFA 11. Reception FIFA 22 was generally well received by reviewers; however, critics noted that the season mode is uninspired. IGN remarked that the fact that players can now move in three dimensions is "not only the best feature in the game, but it also gives us the best control in the entire franchise". Reviewers of Electronic Gaming Monthly (EGM) heavily criticized the game's presentation for being "bland and flat" and the decision to remove the popular Goal Celebration animations in favor of instead "an unintelligent smile," resulting in a feeling of "deja vu." Metro GameCentral's Tom Bramwell gave the game a 7.3 out of 10. He stated that he "found that it's worth getting hold of a game for the pure soccer experience", and that, "Fans of the older games will instantly recognise the joys of actually playing the game and not just watching it unfold and applaud the use of the PlayStation Move to create it." At GameSpot, however, the game received a 6.0 out of 10, with Lee Calloway summarizing, "Offering just a few tweaks to the formula, the 2012 edition of the EA Sports series has managed to make the game feel stagnant."
