A pair of videos shows a woman being harassed by a family on a moving train because she was wearing a wig. The incident took place last week in southern China. Fortunately, no one was injured. One of the videos shows the woman, dressed in jeans and a T-shirt, getting harassed by the family for about 10 minutes. The woman later had a conversation with other passengers, and they politely told the family to mind their own business. The train was rushing when the family started harassing the woman. The woman ignored the family and held on to the handles of her suitcase. She eventually got off the train at the next station. But by then, the family members had become too aggressive. They dragged the woman off the train, and pushed her outside the exit. You can watch the videos here: Her story reads like this: The woman was with a friend when they got on the train. The woman put on a wig and when they tried to enter a first-class lounge, their travel cards were rejected. They were denied entry to the train. The passenger then confronted the conductor and asked why they were being treated like this. The conductor refused to explain. When the pair were denied entry to the lounge, the couple began filming them. It seems that they were simply stating their case. A few minutes later, a woman called the family out of the train. The family members tried to drag the woman into the doorless train and she resisted. The passengers then dragged the woman off the train. The video shows a man trying to stop them. The couple got off the train and went to a park where the train stops. They saw the family and showed them the video. They called the police. The police took down the details and gave them a police report number. They also gave them the names and contact details of Chinese police officers who can deal with cases like this.
