Possible Duplicate: Is it possible to show Auto complete in the editor Is there a way to have a short name for variables you define instead of writing out the full thing? For example, I define a variable var v = 1234; but when I start typing I have to write var. I am thinking this is because of the way variables are created. Can someone see a way around this? A: If you type... at the beginning of the line, Visual Studio will automatically create a new variable: var i = 5; var j = 10; var x = 15; If you want to avoid the issue, but still have the ease of short variable names, you can use // auto-create variable var i = 5; // var i2 = 12; // destroy variable var i = null; var j = 0; // public var... public var x = 15; There's a tip in the VS11 'quickstart' video on how to do this. A: In VS2010 (and maybe in other versions too): When you have a new variable, press CTRL+ALT+' to get to the options/settings screen. There you can turn on auto-complete. A: In VS2010: Settings->Options->Environment->Keyboard. You can then set a custom shortcut for the "auto-complete" function. I tend to use Alt-Space and use custom/shortenings to get the meaning of the variable I'm working with. I suspect if you had it set up that way you wouldn't have to type out the full declaration. Some 100 grassland and forest species could be reclassified as threatened species Migratory birds, reptiles and amphibians could soon be added to Australia's endangered species list after the Government proposed a shake-up of the nation's threatened species legislation.
