The plasma concentration of fibrin degradation products (FDP) were determined after enrichment with respect to fibrinogen in the plasma of the main hepatic vein (MHV), hepatic vein (HV) and femoral vein (FV) in 38 patients with various grades of cirrhosis. FDP were quantitated by the 125I-FDP-AB test. We found a strong correlation between the plasma FDP levels and the severity of the liver disease (p less than 0.001). FDP concentrations in the HV were significantly higher than in the MHV and FV. Neither the degree of portal hypertension nor hypoxemia modified significantly the concentrations of FDP in the HV. The individual results of the FDP levels are compared in three groups of cirrhotics: group A, 12 patients with mild cirrhosis; group B, 17 patients with moderate cirrhosis; and group C, 9 patients with severe cirrhosis. This study indicates that the measurement of FDP is of value in the follow-up of cirrhosis. Moreover, the "normal" values of FDP in the HV should be related to the activity of fibrinolysis.Game Preview: Padres vs. Phillies (Sports Network) - The San Diego Padres, in the midst of a lost season and with only a few games remaining in the year, will look to steal a series in Philadelphia when they square off against the Philadelphia Phillies.
